and nature, but much of the focus is on a strong spiritual aspect often seen in many of her works. "My personal translation of mandolin is meditation landscape, filled with spiritual travel and feelings evoked from music," she explains.

Although many of Hua's works are inspired by traditional Chinese watercolour and Chinese philosophy, hints of Western influences are also apparent. She uses a variety of hues in her pieces, combining a traditionally Eastern palette with a North American one for stunning and unique results. Hua embraces these cultural differences and says she enjoys employing techniques from both Asia and North America to create her own unique style that cannot be categorized.

Wenyun Hua's work can be found in collections throughout North America, Europe, Australia, and Asia.

The opening reception for Mandolin Landscapes take place Thursday, August 19 from 6 p.m. to 9 p.m. at the XEXE Gallery.
